North Reading Police- Public Awareness Bulletin

Over the past several weeks, Boston's local media has been disseminating a tremendous amount of information regarding the overwhelming amount of heroin overdoses and deaths throughout the Northeast Region. Unfortunately, it may have taken the death of a celebrity to bring this serious issue to the forefront of today's news. The Town of North Reading is not immune to this issue and the Police are well aware of the drug addiction, specifically opiates and heroin, that our community faces.

A recent story on a local Boston radio station website claimed that Opioid overdoses in Eastern Massachusetts is the highest in the nation. Click the link below for the full story.

According to our local Fire Department, Narcan (a drug that can reverse an opioid overdose) is being administered more frequently than it had been in the past. Narcan is usually administered to a patient who's overdosing on heroin. On average in North Reading, Narcan is being administered once a month. That average can be somewhat misleading due to Narcan or Naloxone being available by prescription and sold at area pharmacies. In many instances, Narcan is being administered by drug users to other drug users who have possibly overdosed prior to the first responders arrival.
